A two-year long project is now coming to an end and we welcome you to share and discuss the results of our work.

ROBERT

...collected research on sexual exploitation of children online available to date in 22 European countries including Russia and in the US.

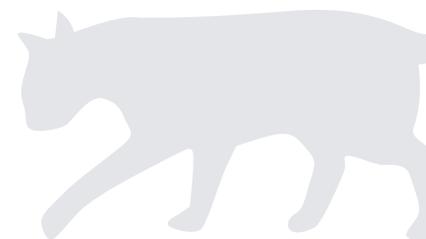

...interviewed young people that have experienced online sexual abuse and online grooming.

...conducted focus groups with young people including those perceived as being particularly vulnerable (young people in residential care, young people with disabilities and young GLBT people).

...interviewed offenders of online grooming.

Kingston University London

This conference is about:

Theory building around online sexual victimisation using young people's own accounts of the processes leading up to the abuse .

The relationship between risk and harm.

Research gaps, research practices and ethical challenges.

Assistance strategies and tools for young people abused online.

Perpetrators and young people: understanding the interaction between them.

Young people believed to be more at risk: Supporting young peoples' resilience.
